The killing of seals will also be shown, a group of Alcuts being represented in the act of smashing their heads with clubs. There will also be represented a number of hair seals, which are not useful for their fur, but merely for food supply to the natives of that region. The walruses, now rapidly becoming extinct, are also to be reproduced in material that will give them a remarkably lifelike appearance. Several men, who are experts in this kind of scientific work, will be placed in the field. During the summer of 1991 the association has thoroughly explored a number of ancient village sites in the valley of the Delaware, and the work has thrown new light on the customs and condition of the prehistoric Indians. On an island in the Delaware an implement-maker's workshop was found, and in another place were one hundred and sixteen finely chipped knives, averaging about six inches in length. The quarry of jasper, where the Indians got their raw material, was found, and thousands of specimens of their workmanship were seenred.
